Take Part In

Recently, several credit card companies have started mandating that each airline that stores, processes or transmits credit card data to submit roadmaps for their project schedule to achieve PCI DSS compliance, and to prevent the consequences from unauthorized disclosure of payment card data. But PCI DSS compliance is not just an issue for airlines, it is important for every company dealing with credit cards.

What Is PCI DSS?

The Payment Card Industry Data Security Standards are a set of international standards created and maintained by the PCI Security Standards Council (PCI SSC), which represents the major card brands (American Express, Discover Financial Services, JCB International, Master Card, and Visa Inc.), to verify that merchants and service providers are appropriately protecting cardholder data. They cover all forms of payment cards — debit, credit, store and company purchasing cards — carrying the logo of a PCI brand member. This represents the vast majority of payment cards issued globally.

Act proactively and become compliant – do not lose money or your well-deserved reputation.
